National HBCU Behavioral Health Awareness Day

Navigating Behavioral Health on HBCU Campuses!

February 20, 2014 10:00 am -12:00 pm EST

The Historically Black Colleges and Universities- Center for Excellence (HBCU-CFE) in Behavioral Health at Morehouse School of Medicine, the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration's (SAMHSA) Center for Substance Abuse Treatment (CSAT) and Center for Mental Health Services (CMHS), Dr. Seawell, Morehouse School of Medicine, Dr. Levine, Morehouse School of Medicine, Jackson State University, and Spelman PEPers are collaborating to launch the National HBCU Behavioral Health Awareness Day net conference on Thursday, February 20, 2014.

The purposes of the event is to increase student and public knowledge and awareness of behavioral health issues to include signs and symptoms; its impact on the overall well-being of students; associated impacts on academic performance; and encourage help seeking behaviors on college campuses and in communities.

The National HBCU Behavioral Health Awareness Day Conference will include student and faculty presentations highlighting cultural specific and promising practices regarding behavioral health awareness and promotion on HBCU campuses and the role of peer educators in health promotion. In addition, the winners from the HBCU Behavioral Health Communication Public Service Announcement (PSA) Contest will be announced.

Dr. David Levine, Morehouse School of Medicine
